

I am finding that it has been difficult to rely on just one provider for service. As such, I feel that videophone users should be able to pick any provider for use of video relay services. Any attempt to block users from other services from calling or preventing access to other video relay services limits my options, especially when a significant delay is experienced in connections.

Thanks,

Neil Holmes